

You Can Help Us Protect A Critical Urban Forest Right Here in Your Community.

What if Kererū started nesting in our cities? What if native fish swam in our urban streams? What if we could walk into a sanctuary of ancient trees, just minutes from your home?

This is already happening, right here in your suburb.

Kohimarama Forest was put up for sale in early November, marketed as land ripe for residential development — no mention of its immense significance for the ecology, culture and community of Kohimarama.

Currently, the forest is a hive of activity for volunteers learning how to work with nature.

What if we double-down on that? What if Kohimarama Forest became a centre for urban forest restoration, where universities, local schools, community groups and businesses learn about biodiversity conservation and can observe ecological intelligence at work?

How Can You Help?

Donate — Consider donating to our Give A Little campaign (the QR code below). We have created the page to gauge public support and build momentum as we approach the larger funding foundations and businesses who might be able to help us purchase of the forest.

Share — Spread our Give A Little campaign and website with your friends & whānau.

Distribute — Flyers and posters are available via our website's 'downloads' page which you can print and distribute amongst your community: www.kohiforest.com/downloads
